Thousands Retain Foreign Nationality On Day Of Decision

In a last-minute rush, thousands of residents of Israel queued up from 7 a.m. on July 14 to declare that they did not want to be citizens of Israel and did want to retain their foreign citizenship and passports. This was known as "opting out" under the citizenship law that provided a two-month period, during which immigrants could appear at immigration offices and make their declaration. Those who did nothing automatically became citizens of Israel.

Unofficially, it was estimated that 1,000,000 Jews in the country still possessed papers entitling them to citizenship of other countries and that of these 20,000 chose to "opt out." The largest group among those were United States citizens. It is estimated that there have been 5,000 to 6,000 United States immigrants to Israel and that more than half took the steps necessary to retain their citizenship, according to the New York Times.

For two months the United States consulates at Tel Aviv and in Jerusalem and Haifa have been besieged by Jewish residents seeking assurance that their papers as United States citizens were in order. They needed the papers to present to Israel immigration authorities to show they were retaining American citizenship. In scores of cases consular officials discovered that residents had lost their citizenship by voting in Israeli elections and for other reasons.

The second largest group retaining foreign nationality were French North Africans. In Tunisia and Morocco most Jews have French nationality, which gave the Jews a sense of superiority over the Arab natives, who did not. Now they find it difficult to abandon French passports.

Most others retaining foreign nationality were Britons, Europeans and immigrants from South Africa. At least one citizen of Kuwait, and hundreds of citizens of Iraq retained their old passports because they hoped it would help them some day to recover property they abandoned when emigrating.

In almost every case those who retained foreign nationality went through a moral struggle before making the decision. Some who are completely devoted to Israel nevertheless retained foreign passports because it would facilitate obtaining exit permits from Israel.

In many cases, in the opinion of the United States officials at Tel Aviv, numerous individuals would have retained their United States citizenship had it not been for the intense social pressure of the collective settlement or other group in which they are living.

Expert Was Self-Taught As Engineer

Leo Sulzberger Herzog of 15 West Seventy-fifth Street, builder and real estate man, died in New York in Doctors Hospital after a brief illness. He was 68 years old. Mr. Herzog had been for forty years with the Edgar A. Levy Construction Company, 505 Fifth Avenue, and was active there until he entered the hospital.

Self-taught in construction engineering, Mr. Herzog supervised the construction of many large apartment houses in mid-Manhattan, including those at 555, 770 and 876 Park Avenue. He was expert in designing and installing master radio and television antennae in modern multiple dwellings, and had written a number of papers on the subject for general publication and for trade journals.

Mr. Herzog was born in New

Bonn Offers Symbol Of Pay For Hitler Thefts

West Germany offered at Wassenaar, the Netherlands, world Jewish organizations 450,000,000 marks (about $107,000,000) for the relief and rehabilitation of Jews persecuted by the Nazi regime, and stated that a further 50,000,000 marks would be made available for aid to non-professing Jews who had been oppressed.

The offer is meant as a symbolic payment for Jewish property expropriated by Hitler's regime, for which heirs and claimants no longer exist. The conference on Germany, representing the world Jewish groups, had asked for $500,000,000 to cover this item and had said the actual amount of heirless and unclaimed Jewish assets was "much larger."

The West German idea is to add the $107,000,000 to the $715,000,000 in goods deliveries that are to be made to Israel under an agreement now nearing completion. Israel would then work out with the world Jewish organizations a method of passing on their share.

Moses A. Leavitt, chairman of the conference delegation, said the German offer would be referred to the presidium of his group in New York. Despite the wide disparity between the demand and the offer, the Jewish organizations were believed likely to accept the German figure if a satisfactory settlement of other issues was reached, according to the New York Times.

These issues concern the program of improving West German legislation for individual restitution and indemnification. A tentative agreement on both these points was achieved when the first phase of the negotiations ended April 8, but the German delegation has asked for a re-opening of discussions on the ground of objections raised within the Bonn ad-

[illegible] apply particularly to the extension of indemnity and restitution payment to Jews who suffered losses in territories occupied and annexed by the Third Reich.

Prof. Franz Josef Boehm, chairman of the German delegation, expressed confidence that the issues would be settled shortly, opening the way for the initiating of a comprehensive series of treaties embodying the over-all settlement with Israel and the world Jewish organizations, which would be ready for signature in September, the Times reports.

Professor Boehm said the establishment of diplomatic relations between Bonn and Israel was not involved in the negotiations and that this would be a matter for "Israel's free choice."

Israel May Alter Policy On Soviet

Recent reports from trustworthy diplomatic sources on the manner in which Communist regimes in the Iron Curtain countries are treating Jews are forcing Israeli Government officials, much against their will, to the conclusion that there has been a radical change in the application of over-all Communist policy toward Zionism and Israel, and that the time may be ripe for a change in Israeli policy, according to the New York Times.

The latest report is that about 400 Jewish Communists have been arrested in Rumania in the last four weeks on the pretext that they were fostering Zionism. Eighty of them were said to have been picked up while attending a meeting of the unofficial Jewish section of the Rumanian Communist party. This was the most sweeping of the anti-Zionist moves that began more than two years ago with the arrest of 160 Zionist leaders.

The present police operation against Rumanian Jewish Communists, which began soon after Mme. Ana Pauker, a Jew and a leading member of the Bucharest regime, got into political trouble, appeared to be similar to but on a larger scale than the operation in Czechoslovakia late last year that accompanied the fall of Rudolf Slansky, who also is Jewish.

Some Israeli officials believe that the anti-Zionist and generally anti-Jewish tendencies that previously had been expressed only occasionally in the satellite countries have had a green light since the removal of these two individuals.

Most important to Israelis is the fact that emigration to Israel from

Israel To Build Capital Near Jerusalem

That Israel will soon build a huge "capital city" to house all Parliament, court and executive offices on a hill northeast of Jerusalem, was disclosed by the Israel delegation to the U.N.

Plans for the new center were included in an Israeli rebuttal to charges by the Syrian delegation that Israel was defying the authority of the U.N. by removing its capital from Tel Aviv to the Holy City. In a letter to U.N. Secretary General Trygve Lie, Syrian delegate Farid Zeineddine said Israel was flouting several resolutions to internationalize Jerusalem, passed from 1947 to 1949 by the Security Council of the General Assembly and Trusteeship Council.

An Israeli spokesman declared Jerusalem "was, is, and always will be the capital of Israel" and [illegible] nations have generally agreed in recent months that it would be impractical and unrealistic to internationalize municipal services to residents. The U.N. resolutions cited by Dr. Zeineddine have never been carried out and internationalization is now a "dead issue", he said.

The Syrian protest centered on Israel's recent decision to move the Ministry of Foreign Affairs from Tel Aviv to Jerusalem, along with the foreign missions of sixteen nations represented at Tel Aviv, says the New York Herald Tribune. The Israeli spokesman said the only reason this was not done long ago was the shortage of office space and housing in the Holy City.

He explained that arrangements have been made to move the missions to houses in the outskirts of modern Jerusalem and the Foreign Ministry to temporary quarters downtown — possibly into [illegible] huts. This phase should be [illegible]

[illegible] are finished [illegible] of the city, in eighteen months to two years, the Foreign Ministry will join all other branches of the government there, he said.

The new capital city will be about ten minutes by automobile from the center of the city, the spokesman said. The site is uninhabited now. Ground has not yet been broken for any of the proposed buildings, but drawings and blueprints are virtually completed. Parliamentary chambers and courts will be located there, as well as executive offices. Architectural details and estimates of the project's cost were not available.

Trader Was Renowned In Realty Field

Elias A. Cohen, seventy-one, one of New York's best known real estate operators who speculated on the buying and selling of large downtown office buildings, died while on a vacation trip in Jerusalem.

Mr. Cohen, who lived at 20 West 86th Street was known for more than fifty years as one of the city's most astute real estate traders, a man who bought and sold for his own account rather than take the commissions of a routine broker. He was known as the man with the "No. 1 office," located in Room 1111 at 111 Broadway, a building which he controlled.

A native of New York, Mr. Cohen was graduated from City College in 1899. Real estate was his life work and he loved it and understood it well. For years he resolutely fought against the notion in some real estate circles that the downtown section of New York was threatened with virtual abandonment, and he was a keen exponent of the value of older office buildings in the lower part of Manhattan. He backed up his ideas by buying and selling many buildings in the Wall Street lower Broadway section at a profit, says the New York Herald Tribune.

He usually held his own capital investment low by obtaining large mortgages, but as the controlling owner of a building, with no broker, the gain was all his own. He knew the market thoroughly, and seldom hesitated long on an offer to buy or sell. He knew his terms in advance.

One of his biggest deals involved the twenty-five-story office building at 3743 Wall Street, which was purchased from the Equitable

Kaplan Was One Of Israel's Founders, Regulated Finances To Permit Immigration

The body of Israel's Deputy Premier Eliezer Kaplan, who died at Genoa, Italy, arrived in Jerusalem for burial. The coffin lay in state in the offices of the Premier and burial took place in Mount Herzl, near the grave of the founder of political Zionism, Dr. Theodor Herzl.

Mr. Kaplan was stricken aboard the Israeli liner Negbah. He was en route to Switzerland with his wife and daughter for a rest. When the vessel docked at Genoa he was taken to the hospital where he died early on July 14.

An El Al Israel National Airlines plane flew the body home from Milan. On board the aircraft were the widow and two daughters; Foreign Minister Moshe Sharett, who flew from Paris to Milan, and officials of the Finance Ministry and Jewish Agency, who flew out from Israel.

Four Israel air force fighter planes met the El Al plane at sea and escorted it toward the coast. Acting President Josef Sprinzak and Premier David Ben-Gurion were among those who boarded the plane after it landed at Lydda.

A wreath sent by Premier Alcide de Gasperi of Italy was on the coffin, which was draped in the Israel national colors when it was lowered from the aircraft. The coffin was taken to Tel Aviv, where a brief service was held outside the offices of the General Federation of Labor (Histadrut), where Mr. Kaplan first gained national prominence three decades ago. The procession then motored to Jerusalem.

A memorial meeting in the Knesset (Parliament) was addressed by Mr. Sprinzak and Premier Ben-Gurion. Mr. Kaplan's seat at the Cabinet table was draped in black. The Jewish Agency, Haifa Municipal Council and other public organizations also held memorial meetings.

Throughout the country black-draped Israel flags were lowered to half-staff. The state radio revised the day's program and played melancholy music.

Surviving besides his wife, Mrs. Deborah Kaplan, who was his first cousin, are two daughters, Mrs. Batyra Rosenberg, who served as his private secretary, and Miss Atara Kaplan.

Mr. Kaplan who was 61 years old, became Deputy Prime Minister on June 25, but in Israel and throughout the world he will be remembered as the man who directed the financing of the Zionist struggle for the establishment of the Jewish State, and who later laid the fiscal groundwork of the new nation, says the New York Times.

Mr. Kaplan was Finance Minister in David Ben-Gurion's Provisional Government in 1948 and held that post until last month, when he resigned because of ill health, and became Deputy Prime Minister. For fifteen years previous, he had been treasurer of the executive of the Jewish Agency for Palestine, which was a sort of shadow cabinet of the nascent state.

Eliezer Kaplan was one of the founders of the State of Israel. Long before it became a sovereignty he foresaw its ultimate development into a Jewish nation and worked toward this ideal. After the First World War he organ-

The Zionist Movement Today

BY DR. NAHUM GOLDMANN, CHAIRMAN OF THE JEWISH AGENCY FOR PALESTINE

Some of my American colleagues doubted whether it was desirable to devote the first two days of the sessions of the Zionist Actions Committee to a general debate on the situation and the future of the Zionist movement. The argued that this would be an impractical discussion which could serve no purpose and lead to no conclusions. I am very glad of this opportunity for a general and so-called impractical debate after many years. I am greatly disturbed that under pressure of day-to-day activities and problems the Zionist movement cannot devote much of its time to such general discussions that have no immediate purpose and do not conclude with a resolution or a vote pro or con.

The Zionist movement began its work as an impractical movement, and was long considered as such. It cannot remain a great movement commanding enthusiasm if it contents itself only with practical tasks and provides no opportunities for "impractical" decisions.

Now that we are holding an "impractical" debate I hope that it will remain such and that the political parties will not inject into it partisan interests, which are practical indeed. I hope that the speakers will not seek to present the point of view of their parties and will not be "against" simply because a member of another party was "for". Let us be so impractical as to forget our party affiliations. I say this to others, and it also applies to me. I do not speak here as a member of the Executive, nor in the name of the Confederation of General Zionists. I speak only in the name of the Jew and the Zionist, Nahum Goldmann.

I will not discuss ideological problems. The older I get the less I believe in abstract ideologies. People are prone to act from psychological motives rather than on abstract ideological grounds. People do something because they want to see that thing done. Their preferences come first, and the arguments to provide a rational and ideological justification for their action are formulated later. Their wishes are the main thing. The psychology and the will of a movement are therefore more important than its abstract ideology.

It is obvious that we are all ready to subscribe to Locker's clear formulation of the tasks of Zionism. All of us agree that these are the tasks which Zionism must fulfil. This plenum does not have to examine historical and metaphysical concepts, as was done at the last Zionist Congress. But we do have to ask what Zionism should do in the present period of Jewish and Zionist history. We are not discussing ideology, which partakes of all hues, as was demonstrated at the last Congress. But when the Congress dropped the metaphysical, historiosophic and ideological debate and reverted to a discussion of the practical problems confronting Zionism today, the language was a bit more uniform. I do not want to discuss these problems either. I want to talk about psychological problems.

I want to discuss those problems that stem from the needs of a Zionist movement that consists of living human beings, persons with blood in their veins, with passions and ambitions. I want to discuss those psychological problems that exist and have developed in Zionism within the specific period of the past few years. In this respect I think that there are three categories of problems which point up the issues today confronting Zionism and the Zionist movement, and of these I will speak briefly.

The first category is that of the relations between the Zionist movement and the Jewish people — Zionism and the Jews. The second category concerns the relations between the Zionist movement and the State of Israel. The third category, probably the most important of the three, affects the relations of Zionists to Zionism.

I want to say a few words about these three aspects. I want to begin with the suspicious remarks made by Prime Minister Ben Gurion in the debate in the Knesset. Our debate is not about the

The Brass Mortar

BY LEVI SHALIT, FROM "AND SO THEY DIED"; TRANSLATED FROM THE YIDDISH, FOR JEWISH AFFAIRS

The special pass made it possible for Berel to go to and from work without a guard. He made use of this privilege in order to absent himself as much as possible from the Ghetto. As the only Jew in the office for supplies, attending on the officers charged with the supply of provisions, he learned how to get on with them tolerably well. He knew by now that one must keep completely out of the way of a certain officer and not let his venomous glance fall upon one. This tyrant's boots must be polished and placed in his room stealthily, but never must one meet him face to face. But there are other officers whom one is allowed to greet with a "Good morning", even though no reply would be given.

But the general demeanour of Martin Depoh, a petty officer, is singularly unlike the behaviour of any German. In the workshops he treats the Jewish workmen humanly, at times he even strolls into the Ghetto on the pretext of fetching his workmen. On these occasions he walks through the Ghetto, quietly, taking in what goes on around him, with head bent as if ashamed of someone. His Jewish workmen say that he is in love with a Jewish girl; that in fact she is one of those who work for him, and at night he brings food parcels to her through the barbed wire. But during working hours he gives no sign of his preference for her. The girl, too, retains a reserve, works like all the others, and looks for no concessions because Depoh loves her.

Depoh is very friendly to Berel. When they are alone in the house, he wants to know what is happening in the Ghetto; how the Jews are faring and what is Berel's opinion of ultimate victory. These conversations take place often, because Depoh who, unlike his comrades, does not drink, is up and about early. Berel, too, comes to work very early and so they meet and chat frequently.

Berel is anxious to get through his work as quickly as possible. He polishes boots, scrubs the stairs, brings in the wood, makes the fire and pumps water into the large tank in the loft. For as soon as he has completed his task, and the officers have left the house, he creeps up to the loft and settles himself behind the tank where hundreds of books lie scattered in disorder.

Chaim Sheskin, one of the richest and most learned Jews, once lived in this very house now occupied by the German officers. His unique library had been well famed. When the Germans cleared the house of "Jewish filth," they ordered these books to be burned. Berel, at the time, collected what he could, and carried them to the loft — ostensibly for use as fuel for the ovens.

Berel used stealthily to carry the rare books and manuscripts away to the Ghetto, but while sorting the books he often dipped into them, becoming so absorbed that he quite forgot his surroundings. In fact, on one occasion, when an officer summoned him, shouting "Jew, Jew", Berel was so engrossed in his reading that he did not hear the call. The officer, who required some article in the loft, came up in person, and only then did Berel wake as from a trance. He excused himself, saying he was getting some paper for a fire, and to prove it he straightaway went down to the officers' room, and started the fire in the oven with a small de luxe edition of the whole of Shakespeare.

This morning, Berel rose early as usual, and went off to work. At the Ghetto gate the guards stopped him and ordered him to wait as a new command was about to be announced from the District Commissariat.

At last the order came through: the inmates of the Ghetto must forthwith bring all their brass and copper articles to the Ghetto-square. So the Jews returned to their homes in order to obey the command.

Berel set about collecting the required articles, but his mother became obstinate. "Rather hide the things; why give them up?"

"Leave them, Mamma," Berel pleaded, "Don't you see — this is their dying gasp. Who knows, perhaps they themselves will fall before the very bullets made from our metal."

"Very well", she said, after some argument, "But nothing on earth will make me part with my brass mortar. It's been a family heirloom for generations."

Berel could not understand his mother's sentimental plea. Was she prepared to risk life itself over a trifle — over five pounds of brass?

It was true that during all these years the mortar had frequently been buried in the ground, hidden from eyes eager to convert brass into bullets. In its checkered career it had even wandered to the banks of the Volga and returned in safety. But even so, Berel said to himself, everything must have an end and die eventually.

There was commotion in the house about the heirloom. They took sides on the question whether to hide it or to surrender it to the Germans. But Berel's mother remained adamant. She would give up everything; every utensil even her brass candlesticks, but nothing in the world would make her yield up her brass mortar. This was her last reminder of her old home — a home that was no more. This memento was all that was now left to her.

And so Berel's mother won the day. Outside the house the whole family kept vigil to make sure that no prying eyes witnessed the burial of the mortar.

Berel went back to work, inwardly cheered. He was more than convinced that things were far from bright in the Reich. He remembered their demands when they first entered the Ghetto. And now they wanted copper and brass!

When Berel got to work the officers were already out. Only one, Paul Hartman, a stocky, overfed fellow, still pottered around, looking for his boots, completely unconscious of where he had taken them off. "Ah!" He was almost delighted to see Berel. "Donner wetter", he exclaimed, "I'm a little tipsy to-day."

Berel found the boots in the next room and tried to help him put them on.

"I'm an officer and yet I allow myself to be helped by a Jew," he said. Lying on his bed, with feet hanging down as they slipped into his boots, he seemed to be addressing empty space. "Everything is filth, if you only can realise it."

Berel was not slow to realise. He knew all too well that this mass of drunken flesh prided itself on its ingenuity. Here he was, safe and sound behind the lines, gorged and bloated, sending masses of stuff to his wife in Thuringen.

"Ja, ja, now our victory is certain. Have you heard about the V.2?" the drunkard hurled this question out of the blue.

"No," Berel replied, "But have you heard to-day's order, signed by Luose, the supreme commander of the Eastern Front, with headquarters in Riga? Have you heard that the Jews are to give up all their brass and copper?"

"Ja, ja, our army requires ammunition," and Paul broke into a stupid roar of laughter. "Hah, hah, hah, one must only understand it."

Another violent tug, and Berel pulled the boot on, Paul's foot slipping in without resistance.

"Open the window," shouted Paul "and let the sun come in."

Berel flung the window wide open. The sound of a dull thud of rolling wheels filled the room. Turning his head, he saw a wagon-load of brass and copper, gleaming red, like a mass of clotted blood, in the bright sunlight.

One day, he thought, after hundreds of years, archaeologists will perhaps retrieve his mother's buried mortar. Yes, they will weigh it, investigate it, and describe it. It will be a great archaeological find. But their researches will never reveal the fact that a Ghetto mother buried it and in so doing risked her very life.

AUSTRALIA BARS NEW CATEGORY

The Hebrew Immigrant Aid Society (HIAS) has been informed by its office in Sydney, that the Australian government is barring the entry into that country of immigrants who resided in Iron Curtain countries subsequent to certain specified dates after World War II. Representations were made to the Australian government by the HIAS affiliate, the Federation of Australian Jewish Welfare Societies, to induce the authorities to give serious review to all immigration applications, rather than to effect automatic rejections. Only Iron Curtain country blood relatives of Australians will henceforth receive consideration by Australian immigration officials.

Persons who resided in the following countries on or after the specified dates are now ineligible to Australia: Rumania, December, 1947; Bulgaria, September, 1947; Czechoslovakia, July, 1948; Yugoslavia, November, 1945; Hungary, January, 1949; Albania, December, 1945; Poland, October, 1947. HIAS officials pointed out that while all countries, including the U.S., are making necessary security checks on all former Iron Curtain country residents, thousands upon thousands of DPs in that category have been, after screening, permitted to enter the U.S. and other countries of immigration.

A city-wide Waltham, Mass., tribute to Brandeis University was highlighted by the proclamation of "Brandeis University Day" by Mayor Turner. At a luncheon meeting of the Waltham Rotary Club, service organizations gathered at the First Parish Unitarian Church to pay tribute to Brandeis President Abram L. Sachar and trustee, Chairman George Alpert. Among the 200 men present were representatives of the Chamber of Commerce, Kiwanis, Lions, Zonta, and the Exchange Club, in addition to Waltham Rotary members. Citations for distinguished service were presented to Dr. Sachar and to Mr. Alpert.

Beat the yolks of the eggs until light and fluffy. Add the salt to the whites, and beat until foamy, then add cream of tartar, and beat until egg-whites cling to the bowl. Fold the beaten egg-yolks into the beaten egg-whites, then fold in sifted sugar and flour. Add flavoring, and pour into an ungreased pan. Cut through batter; then bake in a 300-degree oven for forty-five minutes. Raise heat to 350 degrees, and bake for fifteen minutes longer.

Agree To Settle With Germany

The Policy Committee of the Conference on Jewish Material Claims Against Germany met and authorized its representatives to conclude a settlement of indemnification and restitution claims against Germany on the basis of the terms worked out with a Bonn Government delegation during negotiations in the Hague. Dr. Nahum Goldmann, of New York, who presided, said that although no agreement has yet been reached, there was every reason to believe that in the near future such an agreement would be signed.

Dr. Goldmann said the progress of the negotiations fully vindicated the wisdom of the decision to negotiate directly with the West German Government. Chancellor Konrad Adenauer and his associates, he declared, had displayed an understanding of the moral obligation of Germany "to make material amends for certain of the damages wrought by the Nazis." Dr. Goldmann, who is president of the World Jewish Congress, expressed the conference's appreciation the moral support given to Israel and to the conference by the United States and Britain.

FELTMAN'S GETS LEASE ON LIFE

Feltman's—Coney Island's largest, oldest and most famous purveyor of hot dogs and French fries—gained a new lease on life when a scheduled auction sale of the restaurant failed to produce buyers willing to meet the sellers' terms.

The owners, Feltman's Coney Island, Inc., rejected all bids and announced they would continue to operate the restaurant and its concessions themselves. The auction took place in Feltman's beer garden and the chant of the auctioneer mingled with the tinkle of a nearby carousel and the ping of shots from a shooting gallery.

Feltman's was founded in 1874 and for more than half a century its slogan was "Caterers to Millions." The property belonging to the restaurant totals 138,000 feet, 197 of it fronting on Surf Ave., and 200 feet on the Boardwalk. It is assessed at $1,000,000.

The first bid for the entire parcel was $500,000, but turned down by the owners, Benno M. Bechhold, Aidan Kallman and Harry Socoloff. They also turned down a bid of $5,000 for the Feltman name, and a series of other bids for parcels of the property made by other owners. The auction ended with no sale, says the New York Herald Tribune.

Dr. Lucien Tahar, a Tunisian tuberculosis specialist, left the United States after three months of research as the first overseas physician to study there under a medical scholarship program instituted by the Joint Distribution Committee, major American agency aiding distressed Jews abroad. The medical scholarship fund, set up early this year, expects to bring some ten physicians from North Africa, Israel, and Europe who will return to their native countries to aid in local medical programs on behalf of needy Jews. In Tunisia and other Moslem countries, JDC is carrying on examinations, testing, medical care and hospitalization to combat the high incidence of tuberculosis among the Jewish population. Dr. Tahar, who is medical and executive head of Tunisia's OSE, JDC-financed medical agency, visited the Rutland State Sanatorium in Rutland, Vermont; the Trudeau Foundation in Saranac Lake, N. Y.; and other tuberculosis sanatoria in Florida. Funds for such work are provided by the United Jewish Appeal.

Observers of the Danish political scene attach little importance to the revival of a Danish Nazi Party. According to information reaching the World Jewish Congress from well-informed sources in Copenhagen, the 'new' Nazi party consists of a small circle of Nazi followers. There have been repeated attempts to re-establish a Nazi movement in Denmark since 1945, but they all failed. The size of the present movement is characterised by the fact that its official publication; "Fedrelandet" (Fatherland), appears as a stencilled sheet.

EXPERT

York, the son of the late Belle Adler Herzog and Joseph Herzog. He was educated in the city's public schools and took his technical education in the Hebrew Technical Institute, of which he was a director in later years.

His first job was with the New York Telephone Company. As a construction man he supervised large telephone installations in large stores, plants and other institutions in the city. His first major task during this phase was the installation of a major board at the John Wanamaker Store about 1906.

When the first World War started Mr. Herzog was commissioned a captain in the Quartermaster Corps. One of his outstanding works during the war was construction of a large chemical plant at Emporium, Pa., that produced picric products for military use.

In 1921 Mr. Herzog married Miss Harriet Ethel Cohen, who survives him. He also leaves a daughter, Mrs. Joseph Grubstein of New York City; a granddaughter, Leigh Elizabeth Grubstein; two sisters, the Misses Nina and Rose Herzog, and a brother, David Herzog.

ised in Vienna the first post-war Jewish emigration to Palestine and was a member of the Jewish delegation to the Paris Peace Conference.

One of the most influential leaders of the Zionist movement, he also was one of the least discouraged when the trials and tribulations of the new state placed heavy burdens on the Zionists of the world and the inhabitants of Israel. Mr. Kaplan was a leading light in the vast immigration program and he steadfastly fought against British Government "White Paper" restrictions during the mandate.

After the state was established on May 14, 1948, and he became its Finance Minister, Mr. Kaplan continued to encourage immigration even though the financial strain seemed to be wrecking the country's economy. He instituted austerity with its unpopular rationing, worked untiringly in Israel and abroad to raise the millions necessary to carry on and he proclaimed the further unpopular compulsory loan among Israelis.

Mr. Kaplan was considered the rock on which the state's economy was built and all who had the welfare of Israel at heart respected his drastic solutions to the nation's problems.

A member of the Municipal Council of Tel Aviv, he was instrumental in the development of that all-Jewish city. In 1933 he was elected to the Executive of the Jewish Agency and soon thereafter was again traveling abroad to various conferences concerned with immigration and especially the acceleration of Jewish evacuation from Germany.

Mr. Kaplan was named treasurer for the Jewish Agency in 1937 and was credited with having obtained the first international loan made to the Zionist movement—a $2,000,000 grant from Lloyd's Bank of London for the Palestine Foundation Fund.

In 1945 he came to the United States on a fund-raising tour for the plan to bring 1,000,000 Jews to Palestine. After the state was formed, he was an international commuter for the same purpose. Israel's finance minister, Mr. Kaplan was partly responsible for arranging the $100,000 Export-Import Bank loan to the new state.

Last year he helped launch the first phase of a development plan with a $500,000,000 bond issue floated in the most part in the United States. He thought that prosperity would come to Israel by about 1958 but warned that deprivation and suffering were still factors to be considered, reports the New York Times.

Mr. Kaplan's last government post, Deputy Prime Minister, was created specifically for him after he submitted his resignation two months ago because of ill health as Israel's Finance Minister, a post he held since the establishment of the state on May 14, 1948. Prime Minister David Ben-Gurion named Mr. Kaplan his deputy so he would be available for consultation and advice, but at the same time would be relieved of the administrative duties of a Cabinet member.

Mr. Kaplan was a lifelong Labor Zionist, and since migrating from his native Russia to Palestine in 1923, had been a leading member of Mapai, Prime Minister Ben-Gurion's dominant labor party. As a Zionist leader he became treasurer of the Jewish Agency for Palestine in 1933, holding that post until his appointment as Israel's Finance Minister. Before establishment of Israel the Jewish Agency was spokesman for all Zionist groups, and indeed for most of world Jewry, in dealing with various governments.

Mr. Kaplan was born in Minsk January 27, 1891, the son of Mayer Kaplan, a shopkeeper. After studying in a Jewish parochial school and a high school in his native province, he went to a technical school in Moscow from which he was graduated with a degree in civil engineering.

He joined the Labor Zionist party in Russia at the age of seventeen and four years later was named secretary of the organization for the Kiev area. Always an opponent of extremist philosophies, he resisted the Communist ferment in Russia and remained firm in the moderate Socialist position, says the New York Herald Tribune.

In 1919-'20, while the world powers were negotiating peace treaties after World War I, Mr. Kaplan attended the sessions as a member of a Jewish delegation to try to embody in all such agreements protection of Jewish and other minority rights.

Moving to Palestine in 1923, he joined Histadrut, Israel's labor federation, which is today the base of Mr. Ben-Gurion's Mapai party. Here his associates included many of the most famous of Zionist leaders, Ben-Gurion, Joseph Sprinzak, the late Berl Katznelson, the late David Remez, and later Golda Myerson. Because of his engineering and financial ability, Histadrut made Mr. Kaplan director of the technological department of Solel Boneh, Histadrut's construction corporation, which at that time did most of the building in Palestine.

Mr. Kaplan's task of being Finance Minister in a country continuously on the brink of economic collapse made him a target for attacks from both Leftists and conservatives. His final public action while Finance Minister was a government decree exacting a compulsory loan of 10 per cent of all bank deposits and the issuing of new currency, a decree intended to bring hoarded money into circulation.

As Finance Minister Mr. Kaplan was interested in the success in the United States of the United Jewish Appeal and the $500,000,000 Israel bond sale. During the fight for control of the administration of the United Jewish Appeal, Mr. Kaplan sided with Henry Morgenthau jr. and Henry Monter, who eventually won out against Rabbi Abba Hillel Silver and his followers, says the New York Herald Tribune.

proposed law. We will speak of that later. I also think that the Presidium has acted wisely in deciding not to discuss today the question of status for the Zionist Organization. This, too, we will discuss separately. Mr. Ben Gurion warned against exaggerating the so-called decline of the Zionist movement. I do not subscribe to a policy of describing the situation in bright hues. I think that the problems are serious, and serious problems should be explained in all their gravity. On the other hand, it is necessary to avoid panic.

Break Up Fight In Knesset

A meeting of the Israel Knesset (Parliament) broke up in disorder this month, with officials of the House standing between members of Prime Minister David Ben-Gurion's Mapai party and the Communists to prevent a threatened fist fight. Unable to restore order, Speaker Yosef Sprinzak rapped his gavel and declared the meeting closed because of the behavior of two Communist members.

The row developed from a virulent speech by an Arab Communist, Twafik Toubi, in which he charged that the Israeli Army committed atrocities against Arab citizens. Mr. Toubi spoke in Arabic and Mr. Ben-Gurion, one of the few members who speaks that language, cried "Slander!" From that point tension rose and the clerk of the House, Moshe Rosette, caught the arm of a 68-year-old member who was about to strike Mr. Toubi, reports the New York Times.

Speaker Sprinzak permitted a Hebrew interpreter to translate only parts of the speech dealing with the military action in Al-Shibli village, where, according to Mr. Toubi, soldiers looted and stole food and other possessions. Mr. Ben-Gurion said Mr. Toubi was guilty of "low, dirty calumnies against the Israeli Army," adding "never in the history of the Knesset has immunity of members been so abused."

The ability to relax is a healthful art that should be cultivated. Even a few minutes given up during the day to complete relaxation of mind, muscles, or sitting quietly with feet raised, eyes closed and the mind not concentrating on worries and problems, will help to rest tired muscles and limbs.

Small children should never be left alone where there is any form of fire or means of kindling flame. Matches, cigarette lighters or other instruments that produce fire are always attractive to little people but they may cause disastrous fires and loss of life.

CITY-WIDE AND OUT-OF-TOWN DELIVERY

The American Zionist leader, Louis Lipsky, who is regrettably not here, once said that the trouble with Zionists is that the more they try to commit suicide the louder they shout that someone wishes to murder them. This is true of any movement. Several history knows only the murder of years ago I stated in a lecture that individuals, even of many individuals — the murder of six million Jews. But the criminal code of history does not list the crime of murdering a people. A nation may go down to destruction, when it loses faith in itself. But that is suicide, not murder.

That which holds true for a people is also true of a great political movement. No great political movement disappears from the world scene as a result of the triumph of other movements. It disappears only when it ceases to believe in itself. I think that we are somewhat in this situation.

There are objective grounds for this situation. Mr. Ben Gurion spoke of these and it is not necessary to repeat them. One of the objective causes is the loss of European Jewry. It is obvious that the Zionist movement, whose greatness and strength stem from Jewish history and the consistent traditions of Jewish life, received a mortal blow from the death of six million Jews. They were the bearers of the great and ancient history and traditions of our people, the intellectual and emotional standard-bearers of our movement. Were I to offer an example, I would try to compare the Zionist Congress of our time with those in which Chaim Nachman Bialik and Schemaryahu Levin participated. I am citing two personalities outstanding in all respects. The Congresses of our day cannot compare with those in the days when men of such stature lived in our midst.

American Jewry has not yet reached the stage where it can take over the functions and the heritage of European Jewry. It lacks an age-old tradition. The six million Jews are gone. The sources upon which the movement drew while these were alive are gone. I think that generations will have to pass before Israel will produce the forces that can take the place of those that had come to us from European Jewry.

Clearly, this suffices to create the feeling that Zionism is not what it used to be, the kind of Zionism which we, the old-timers, were accustomed to in previous Congresses when the spiritual leaders of European Jewry, both eastern and western, determined the spiritual image of the Congresses.

We cannot alter objective causes. But there are psychological causes that we can change. As Jews and as Zionists we have experienced great emotional tensions during the decade and a half preceding the rise of Israel. There was the Hitler period, the catastrophe of six million murdered Jews, World War II, the struggle in Palestine, the terror, the so-called illegal immigration, the political struggle on the international scene and the final crowning achievement, the establishment of the State of Israel. Now we live in times that may be called normal. The tension has subsided. We are consolidating the products of the most dramatic era in modern Jewish history. There are no tensions, no sleepless nights, no outcries, and no wrath, no weeping and no elation.

If we compare Zionism in America today with the Zionism of past years, and mobilization for the struggle against the mandatory government with today's need to raise money, it is evident why the dramatic emotions are missing. We no longer struggle for immigration, we no longer struggle against a mandatory power. Consequently, there has been a drop in temperature. The Zionist movement is not to be blamed for this. We must not always blame ourselves. Nor must we conclude that the movement has lost its value, that it is no longer as important as it had been. Perhaps there will be a recurrence of the high-charged mood. I don't know whether to pray for a recurrence. We certainly hope that there will be no repetition of the conditions which propelled us, in preceding years, into tension and activity.

I now come to a second factor which I want to discuss. It is a pity that the government ministers are not here. The establishment of the State has created a situation to which Zionists will have to accustom themselves. Ben Gurion has pointed out that the Zionists had not yet psychologically digested this new reality. The establishment of the State has given rise to an inferiority complex among Zionists, and this is liable to be the downfall of the movement.

Every State, not only Israel, possesses glamour. It is my opinion that the world of the future will not be organized along the line of states. I am therefore not much impressed by Consuls, Ambassadors and Ministers. But in the world of today a State is a glamorous object, especially for a people which for generations had rabbis and shochtim and communal big shots, but not Ministers. It was therefore natural that there should be admiration for the State at first. The representatives of Israel on the other hand, suffer from a sense of superiority which appears to rise in inverse proportion to the importance of the office held.

A State has more than glamour and prestige. It also has executive force. However, Zionists should not envy the State. If they desire, they can come to Israel, become members of Knesset and be appointed to the Cabinet. So why the envy? One can't eat one's cake and have it too; enjoy the glamour of statehood yet remain in the Diaspora. A Zionist leader must decide which of the two he prefers. The movement must free itself of the feeling of inferiority and learn from the experiences of the past four years, that the Zionist movement is no less important than the State for the realization of the Zionist ideal.

The leaders of the State now admit this, yet how many of them realized this truth when the State was proclaimed? Some of them believed that the establishment of the State spelled the achievement of the Zionist ideal. During the past four years we have learned that Israel will not become what we want it to be, materially and spiritually, without the assistance of that great movement which has led the Jewish people in the national task of building the State.

It is therefore important that Zionists begin to regard themselves with more self-respect and to understand that Jewish history has reserved for them an important role for generations to come. The State has tasks of its own, and the Zionist movement has functions in its own field. There is no room either for envy or competition. Ben Gurion has already said that a movement is built out of its own strength and its faith in its strength. We must understand, though some people in the government still fail to grasp it, that we do not seek a partnership with the State in order to win the approval of this or that representative of the State, but because we believe in the importance of our work.

Can Israel Survive?

FROM THE NEW STATESMAN AND NATION

In the past few months the news from Israel has been very alarming. Despite a whole series of fiscal and economic measures — culminating in the recent withdrawal of the currency and the forced loan — inflation mounts, and the gap between exports and imports widens. Even the assurance (given after a high-powered mission to Washington) that essential supplies for the next six months had been assured, was proved unwarranted. Although the small minority who live in collective settlements are still prosperous and well fed, the swollen populations of Tel Aviv, Haifa and Jerusalem are desperately hard up. Whether they get their ration in any week may depend on the arrival of a single ship.

No wonder that the wildest rumours are current, including predictions that the democratic State is about to collapse, and that the Prime Minister, Ben Gurion, will soon make himself dictator, now that a Cabinet crisis had forced the resignation of the Finance Minister, Mr. Kaplan. A sober study of the situation indicates that these rumours are exaggerated. It seems, for instance, that Mr. Kaplan's resignation was due only to the state of his health: for the last two years he remained in office against his doctor's advice, until he completely collapsed at a Cabinet meeting. As for the Prime Minister, since he has always frankly admitted that he knows as little about economics as Mr. Churchill, he is unlikely to risk his enormous prestige by making himself personally responsible for the crisis measures.

Yet the political situation remains tense, with Mapam—the Nenni-type Socialists—exerting a dangerous blackmail on the Government. The leaders of Mapai, the orthodox Labour Party, cannot agree to cut the nation's fantastically inflated wage bill because they know that, if they impose further austerity, they may lose control of the trade unions to their Left-wing rivals, who promise that everything will go well once Israel has been "freed from thralldom to dollar imperialism."

They are also faced with a threat from the extreme Right. Though the Herut (the parliamentary successor to the Irgun) is now insignificant, there is a recrudescence, especially in Army circles, of Revisionism, the theory that Israel's problems can be solved by over-running the Arab Triangle and pushing the frontiers to the Jordan. Nevertheless the present coalition is still amply strong enough to hold its own against the extremists. Politically, Israel is viable.

But what about economics? Outside observers too easily assume that the only cause of the crisis is immigration. It should be remembered, however, that the new Jewish population hardly outnumbers the Arabs who fled from what is now Israel. The fact is that the new State could very quickly become as viable — and as miserable—as its neighbours if the Government were ready to permit the Jew from the Yemen and Iraq to be exploited as ersatz Arab labour. But if that happened, the whole ideal of Zionism would have been thrown overboard.

Israel's problem is that she is trying to assimilate a new and varied population and at the same time to continue building up a democratic Socialist community with European standards in a country of Oriental poverty. The Arab peasants used to live in squalor. The Jewish immigrant must be given housing, welfare services, education.

That this is the basic cause from which the economic crisis stems can be seen from a glance at citrus, Palestine's main export before the war, and still the most important Israeli product. The war prevented the irrigation which orange trees demand, and so destroyed not only the Arab groves but a large number of the Jewish as well. In what was left, Jewish labour had often to replace cheap Arab labour.

With Jewish wage rates, citrus is unprofitable unless the whole process, from tending the groves to packing the oranges or extracting the juice, is mechanised. But mechanisation is only possible by replanting the trees farther apart, and it is six years before an orange tree bears fruit. This task, as well as the introduction of the Californian method of watering the groves by sprinklers above the trees, instead of by piping water to the roots, is being slowly undertaken. But citrus exports are only one-quarter of the pre-war level and wages are probably still too high.

Another reason for the crisis, which is usually overlooked, is the difficulty of maintaining an economy of full employment and fair shares—including rationing, price control and subsidies—in a naturally poor country whose main requirement is rapid industrialisation and whose main source of capital is an American Jewry with little understanding for Socialist experiments. Had the new State been able strictly to control the investment of new capital from the U.S., it might have been able to control inflation, at least until the impact of the Korean war on world prices.

As it is, the combination of well-intentioned free enterprise by American Jewry with over-ambitious planning by the Israeli themselves has produced a wild internal inflation and a grave payments crisis. Far too often splendid new factories have been run up before anyone has bothered to ask whether the foreign exchange will be available to purchase raw materials. Far too often manufacturers, making large profits on a booming home market, have refused to produce for export—encouraged by the knowledge that poor productivity and low quality would make it difficult to sell their goods overseas.

About a quarter of the new immigrants are children under fourteen; and a disappointing proportion of their parents show much aptitude either for agricultural labour or the modern production line. Traditionally small traders, their aim in life has been to set up a shop or a roadside café in the sprawling suburbs of Tel Aviv—and their children, who will become useful citizens, are still at school.

Add to these economic and social problems: (1) the weaknesses of an inexperienced and grossly underpaid civil service; (2) the cost of a huge standing army—victorious in battle and therefore exacting in its peacetime demands; and (3) the habit of relying on the philanthropy of world Jewry to evade economic realities—and it is clear that immigration has not been the sole cause of the crisis.

Moreover, since January, though Government spokesmen cannot dare to admit it, the flood of immigrants has been nearly cut down to the trickle that Ernest Bevin permitted. Unless another Jewish community of the Diaspora is overtaken by disaster, there is no likelihood of another wave.

The problem, therefore, which faces Ben Gurion is to organise the present manpower and resources of Israel into a workable community. In defeating the Arabs, the new State achieved the impossible. He has now to persuade it to achieve the possible, to put an end to Utopianism (whether of the Free Enterprise or the Socialist brand) without destroying initiative and idealism, and to reach stability without degenerating into a Levantine lethargy. There are some signs that this workaday job is being undertaken.

The irrigation of the Northern Negev, as far south as Beersheba, is nearing completion, and this year superbly good crops have been obtained. Now the same thing must be done in Galilee. When water has been piped to these lovely hills, Israel should be able to produce 60 per cent. of her essential foodstuffs within her own frontiers. Apart from citrus, which we have discussed already, the export potentials are few, but it is hoped that phosphate production at the Southern end of the Dead Sea will soon be under way.

Otherwise, Israel must depend on those light industries which can be developed on the basis of available raw materials or of strictly limited allocations of foreign exchange. Up till now she has relied far too much on "fund-raising". What she needs now is a flow of investment attracted not by sentiment but by hard-headed calculations of profit. If she could tide over the next three or four years until her new and soberer agricultural and industrial plans mature, there is no intrinsic reason why she should not achieve solvency.

But there still remains the problem of her relations with her Arab neighbours. When the war ended, it was fondly hoped that the wounds it had caused would heal with time. There was no reason for this optimism, which was encouraged by the British and American Governments, and it has not been justified by events. The frontiers of the new State are still the intolerable armistice lines, often cutting the villager off from his fields, severing the main lines of communication, and stoking the sullen fires of hatred between Arab and Jew.

Four years after the war ended, hundreds of thousands of Arab refugees in the Gaza strip, in Jordan, in Syria and Lebanon still live in utter destitution in U.N. camps, reminding the rulers of the Arab States—if they needed reminding—of the ill-will it is their national duty to feel not only towards Israel but to Britain and the U.S.A. as well. Quite recently on the technical level, a fairly complete agreement was reached between Jordanian and Israeli representatives for adjusting the most intolerable injustices of the armistice line.

At the last moment the Jordanian Government, remembering that Abdullah was murdered for being pro-Jewish, went back on the agreement. They can hardly be blamed for doing so. So long as Britain and America are exclusively concerned with their military interests in this area, permit the refugees to rot, and show no interest whatever in Middle Eastern development, the Israeli will remain a beleaguered garrison in hostile territory: they will weather their crises, but they will never be able to cure them.

ISRAEL MAY ALTER

these countries has virtually ceased. Movements from all except Rumania have been reduced to a trickle since the beginning of the year. While Rumania contributed 3,754 persons since January 1, all other Eastern European countries contributed only 297 between January 1 and May 31.

However, since April, when 325 arrived, the flow from Rumania also has terminated. Since then Rumanian authorities have informed the Israeli Government that the liner Transylvania, which formerly moved emigrants, is "under repair," although it has continued to cruise about the Eastern Mediterranean and even called at Haifa in June—to pick up thirty Jews who wanted to return to Rumania.

None of the Eastern European Governments has officially admitted it, but all indications are that large-scale emigration from behind the Iron Curtain is finished. Israeli officials, because of their feeling of responsibility for 2,150,000 Jews in Communist Europe, including 1,800,000 in the Soviet Union, are reluctant to accept the conclusion that there has been any change in Communist policy because of their Communist policy.

While Israeli officials long since had abandoned all illusions about the emigration of Jews from the Soviet Union, until recently they still hoped to move most of the 350,000 in the satellite countries to Israel, the New York Times says. For this reason the new state, during the first two years of its existence, has followed a policy of "nonidentification" between East and West. Even in recent months, members of the Governments have avoided outright pro-Western expressions as well as outright anti-Sovietism. Now, however, Israeli foreign policy may become more forthright.

Trust Company of New York at a reported price of $4,500,000. In 1929, his company sold it back to Equitable at a reported profit of $1,000,000.

Mr. Cohen was proud of his own accomplishments and frequently recounted his rise from the depths of the depression by swinging an advantageous deal on a building that was "selling for a song." In his depression low, he once avoided his landlord for several weeks, only to discover that, instead of pursuing him for his rent, the man was trying to bid on a piece of property. The landlord finally caught up with him — and the value of the property was on the upswing.

Through his Broadway-John Street Corp. he headed many corporations, some of them with names, a large number whose titles were simply the addresses of buildings.

Active in many philanthropies, he founded the Tranquility summer camp for children at Earlton, N. Y. He was president and a director of Temple Ansche Chesed, 100th Street and West End Avenue, and honorary president of Temple Beth-El, Rockaway Park, Queens. He had recently been active in the City College centennial fund campaign. Surviving are a brother, Walter, and five sisters, Mrs. Bella C. Cohn, Mrs. Mathilda Kleban, Mrs. Blanche S. Nierenstein, Mrs. Beatrice C. Rosenfeld, and Mrs. Estelle C. Friendel.

Mrs. Eleanor Roosevelt has agreed to accept the post of World Patron of Youth Aliyah, the movement engaged in the immigration, rehabilitation and training of homeless Jewish children from all parts of the world. Mrs. Roosevelt will succeed the late Field Marshal Jan Smuts in the post.
